

wild haste across the furrows, reckless of damage to the growing corn. "She is jes' as heady as Mawse Nick heself; an'

mawster ain' got no room ter complain when his chillen tek dey own way; dey

"I'm a-goin' with you!" panted Missy, is made atter his own petterun plum!"

as soon as she was within hearing distance of her father's much indulged old slave, who, being slightly lame, and duly considerate of the corn crop, was white teeth. "Here you come Fromplin

"I want to go wadin'," said Missy.

"There, now!" cried Missy, angrily, "I was just forgettin' 'bout Brer Nicholas!

with her slender hands across her heart

"Now, now, Honey, doan you go cry, old Gilbert remonstrated. "Mawse Nicholas gwan come home one o' dese days.

But the old man sighed. He was not so "I want him today! I want him now!"

sobbed Missy. "I do believe it'll be a whole everlastin' year befo' I see Brer

Nicholas any mo'; and me with no broth-

"Mawster drors de reins too tight, himself. "Hukkom he kin be so hard

His "no 'countness" was a point much on his own flesh en blood, en so easy Insisted upon by Daddy Gilbert, who cherished his slight lameness as a means of securing him an immunity from any

Missy objected. "Yo can do mo' work than Tom Quash and Griffin Jim. They couldn't make round bottomed baskets,

The old man chuckled with gratified

"And I am goin' with you-no matter if you ain't goin' to the branch," she de-

"No, you doan go long o' me, Missy,"

"I'm tired of the house," Missy said,

"Now ain' dat a pity!" exclaimed old en' I'm gwan ketch you a Molly cotton

Missy paused, glowering from under her puckered brows. The house had no attractions for her while the sun was shining warm and bright, and the woods were waving boughs of green. But suddenly the frown relaxed; Missy was inspired by a brilliant purpose. She per-midst of the plan thicket, on the other side of the reed beyond the cornfield where she hoved to find Doda Furnival, a girl eight years her senior, for whom she entertained an immense respect. It mattered nothing to this daughter of the blue blooded Thornes that Dosia's father see: Missy found her altogether admirable. For Doda was gentle and patient:

she assumed cone of those airs of superi-colonel's benuniful mens, so obnoxious to her little cousin. Missy had heard, a few days before, that Donia was not in Tallahassee: it therefore occurred to her that she might be round with the carpenter's kinsfolk, who inhabited the sorry little house at the bend of the Thorae Hill road,

With the colonel and Miss Elvira on the road to town, with Glory-Ann busy in the house, and Daddy Gilbert wending his solitary way to the woods. Masy decided that she might venture to steal off for an hour or so, without risk of discovery,

She turned her face towards home, but she had gone only a few yards, when she abruptly changed her course and began to walk rapidly across the field in the di-

But just as she took this turn, old Gil-

"Hi-yi!" he called out, sternly. "Go bert was minded to look back, and he back fer de gret house, stret! You got no call to foller atter dem po' white trash!

De Thornes is quality; de nin' got no

"You mean ole nigger!" cried Missy,

"I ain' gwan see no chile o mawster's

'sociatin' wid dem Furnivals," said old

Gilbert, unmoved. "You tote yo'sef stret back ter de gret house, else I gwan tell

Missy, after a few irresolute moments, wiped her tears on the skirt of her gingham sun bonnet, and went resignedly back to the gap in the garden paling, slipped through and confronted Glory-

Ann in the latticed gallery between the Glory-Ann was sented in a low, splint bottomed conir, with a broad, smooth board across her knees, and a pen-knife in her right hand; she was making ready to crimp Miss Elvira's ruffled aprons that lay folded in a basket on the stool at her side. She paused in the act of lifting the apron from the basket, and looked over her spectacles with an air of grave rebuke at the flushed face of the

"I'm bound you ain' made nothin' by yo' trip but two shocfuls o' sand," she kitchen and the main building.

child coming up the stape.

said, severely,

instantly detected her purpose.

business wid de Furnivals."

Missle-virey, mun."

rection of the road.

said old Gilbert, uneasily, "Hit's too fur. You jes' tote yo'sef back ter de not if they was to try.

beginning to cry afresh.

tail, or mebbe a squirl.

ceived that it might be

"I don't see as you're so no 'count," er and no sister, 'cepsia' only him."

wid dis po' no 'count ole nigger?"

sure of his prophecy himself.

making his way leisurely.

you wuz bawn?"

CHAPTER L. LITTLE MISSY.

"Praise de kingdom!" Glory-Ann ejacuinted.

Miss Thorne, or, more familiarly, Miss Elvira, a gentle, faded beauty, attired according to the height of the style in the year of grace eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, was going, this warm May morning, "up to town," as they said on the plantations around Tallahassee in the days before the war; and the entire I ain't come out here for you to talk to domestic retinue of Thorne Hill were as- me 'bout Brer Nicholas; it makes me sembled to speed her departure. Her all-swelled-just here." And Missy, brother, the colonel, had preceded her on horseback, for he was a man of too began to sob. many inches to endure a carriage in a drive of nine long miles. It may have been because of these extra inches that he was called colonel, but his world acknowledged the title without inquiry,

The colonel's only daughter, Miss Wina motherless lass of eleven, was ed this day to be left at home in of Glory-Ann, the old family whose name Miss Winifred had rmed into "Mom Bee."

that Winifred does not run in the diss Elvira said, as she sank back t the cushions and opened a little orn volume of Bishop Ken's "De-

Miss Elvira spent her day, for most part, reading this good book; she had formed the habit when she gave up Sir Walter Scott's novels, nobody knew how long ago-or nobody told. It was a practice that enabled her to forget little Miss Winifred, who was a young lady of exasperating devices.

"Wouldn' s'prise me ef Missy wuz in dishyer sun now dis minute," grumbled Giory-Annas the carriage rolled away. Yit she mought be a pontin' somewhers | vanity. bout de house," she amended, as she began laboriously to climb the stairs.

The house at Thorne Hill had a third story-under the roof, lighted by a window in each gable, and deep, high neaked dormers, back and front. The stair landing divided this story into two long gret house. rooms, which were used chiefly for storing odds and ends. in the cool north here, in an old discarded arm chair be- Gilbert, impatiently. "I'm s'prised at side the gaide window, Glory-Ann found Glory-Ann lettin you run loose in dish-

A wild looking child she was, very small for her 11 years, with scant promise of beauty. She had large eyes of a dark, uncertain color, a mouth for which her teeth seemed too' many, and an insignificial nose. Strenks of sunburnt vellor marred the beauty of her curling and thundant residish brown balr; more over her face was freekied. She wore a fided green gingham dress, which marked her growth by two bands of deeper color in the shirt, where the provident tucks had been bet out. Her arms and shoulders were bare, but pantalettes her ankles, and obscured her white stock ings. Her shoes, every way too large. laced up the front.

"Praise de kingdom!" Glary-Ann was a carpenter, and timt her mother ejaculated, pausing to the disaway, her made dresses for the ladies of Tallahasarms atlinbo, "You data Honey?" "Go was! Lemme lone!" was Honey's

But Glay-Ann substited to the floor beside the arm chair, slowle and with a sigh, and there she cronched, her bands clasping her lances. She foresaw that the exportation to duty she felt bound to deliver would occurve a portion of time distinctly appreciate by her sti7 and elderly joints. "Why a't you mind yo' book, missy?" she begun.

"I'm tired of this old plantation!" Missy declared, irrelevantly. "I want to go ever an ever so far away!" This was the burden of the young lady's lament whenever her aunt went up to town with

"You'd be tuk wid a mighty honin' ter git back," said G. sry-Ann. "You ter talk bom quitan here, when you can't so much as on a yolast," she concluded. half in pity, half in reproachful pride. "I can!" refor ed Missy, indigmantly as she tugged at the strangy and inadequate blue moben that was supposed to keep in subjection her rebellious hair.

Den hukkom you don't nuver do it?" demanded Glory-Ann, with siv humor. To this thrust Missy made no reply, and the old nurse began anew to exhort her to "mind her book." "Do, now, Missy, lak a good coile, jes' as Misslevirey said; "an I'm gwan mek de moest little ginger pone, tubbe sho!"

Tempted by this prospect, Missy slowly rose, and clasping her small sun browned. hands on the top of her head, stood contemplating, with lazy indifference, her old nurse's struggling achievement of the perpendicular. When at last Mom Bee, with a grunt of thanksgiving, stood apon her feet. Missy's eyes had found an attraction in the Home Field, beyond the garden fence, where the corn in the furrows was making a promising show of green. In an instant her languor and indifference vanished.

"Mom Bee! Mom Bee!" she cried ex-"There's Daddy Gilbert in the Home Field; you reckon he's goin' to the branch?"

"Jes' lis'n at dat, now!" said Glory-Ann, in a discouraged tone, "Why sin't 'you mindin' yo' book, stidder studyin' dat ole nigger's doin's?"

"I'm a goin' with him!" Missy announced, as she rushed from the room, and went tearing downstairs deaf to all floor, threw her bonnet into a corner, and pulling off her shoes, emptied two little piles of sand at Glory-Ann's feet. "You gwan 'pent of all dis trapesin'

Ann proceeded remorselessly. "De way you goes on is enough ter set dem freckles fur ever 'n' ever.' Missy put up her little sunburned hand and meditatively rubbed her cheek.

'My cousin Flora has got frecklessome," she said. "None ter hu't!" retorted Glory-Ann,

"And Dosia Furnival ain't got one: she's prettier than my cousin Flora, anyhow," Missy proclaimed, with defiance, Glory-Ann stopped her work, and clutching the two ends of the lap board "Jes' look at her now!" lamented while she straightened herself up, de-Glory-Ann, as the child slipped through "Is you been ter dem Furnivals, Missy? a gap,in the garden paling, and made

Is you been?" "Daddy Gilbert wouldn't let me," Missy pouted. "Tubbe sho," said Glory-Ann. "What's a Thorne gotter do consortin' wid a Furnival, which de Thornes is quality?" "Dosie is more nicer than my cousin Flora," said the unrepentant Missy, stretching herself out on the floor, face downwards, resting on her elbows and supporting her chin in her hands, as she gazed up serenely at her admonisher.

"She don't snap me up, ever." "Mawster above!" exclaimed the old "I'd lak ter see her try hit?" cried man, with a grin that displayed his big Glory-Ann, her very turban bristling with insulted family pride. "Miss Flora de cawn lak so much pusley an' gittin' is a Thorne, en' a Thorne kin snap at a yo' skin tunned up. Why'nt you satis-Thorne; but a Furnival-po' white trash! fied ter set in de gret house, lak de lady And Glory-Ann made an emphatic pleat in Miss Elvira's ruffle. "Don't lemme hear no mo' sech talk," she commanded, "I ain't gwan ter no branch," said old with all the authority vested in her title Gilbert, with decision; and before the of Mom Bee. Then she lifted up her child could recover from the surprise of her disappoinment, he asked with pathetic eagerness, "Is mawster hearn dis chile's shoes." fum Mawse Nick lately, ez you knows Amity, a girl of fifteen, in training for Miss Winifred's maid, was seated in the shadow of the Chinaberry tree, beguiling the tedium of towel hemming by building sand houses over her feet. She started guiltily when she heard herself called, tumbled off the upturned cotton basket that served her for a stool and darted to the gallery, where she set herself at once to obey Glory-Ann's behest. Missy offered no resistance; but as she did not choose to change ber position, it was a work of some dexterity and no little time to put on the shoes and lace them up; at Thorne Hill, however "time was plenty," as old Gilbert used to say, and Amity was in no mind to hurry.

"I'm gwan on 62 year," pursued Mom Bee, boastfully, "en' I has allers b'longed in de Thorne fam'ly. I wuz bawn in de murmured old Gilbert, communing with fam'ly, I wuz raized in de fam'ly, en', praise de Lawd, I spects ter die in de fam'ly. You is bound ter pay respec' ter my words, Missy, fur you en' Mawse Nick ain' de only ones I has fotch up. I had a han'in Missle-virey's raisin', en' dere ain' nobody kin fault her manners. En' Missel-virey, she knows what a Thorne doan b'long 'long of a Furnival, en' a Furnival doan b'long long a Thorne. Hukkom you ain' patternin' atter Misselviroy?" And Glory Ann looked at her charge over her spectacles with stern, rebuking eyes.

Missy, freeing herself with a jerk from the hands of Amity, wheeled over, and sat boit upright, inspired by a sudden and comforting recollection.

"Mom Bee! whey is that ginger pone?" she demanded.

When he had fingered his wealth to his sus-off to that dingy little dwelling in the Old Gillert climbed the high rail fence surrounding the field, and, having crossed spring, plunged at once into the woods, where the trees grew tall and close, and where the wild grape vines and the nothin' in de woods dis time o' year ter smell sassyfac anywheren." sparkleberry bushes continually interfeed aer." cepted his advance; but with such obhe knew all the trees that grew, and all plants that were for healing, and all noxious things to be avoided. He came at last to a little dell, shut in on every alarm. aids by abruptly sloping ground, and almost impenetrable to the sunshine. lichen grown log, he knelt down, and, game o' poter." pushing aside a brush heap, laid bare a ole in the ground, wherein was set a wide and deep iron pot, protected by an more from old Gilbert. ron lid, on top of which was a tin platter that covered a fracture large enough to admit old Gilbert's band and arm. This was the bank to which he confided the dimes he received for chickens and eggs and the skilled labor of his hands, or old Gilbert was master of many crafts by which money was to be earned, and for all his jobs he was paid in good hard coin, an unconquerable prejudice leading him to refuse what he called himber money."

As he had the privilege of selling his manufactures off the plantation, he commanded what might be termed a wide market. Often he sent his wares up to town; sometimes even he condescended stuck his thumbs into his "galluses, to dispose of a mat or a broom to the despised Furnivals across the road. What he did with the money thus earned he told no one; what he meant to do with these accumulated small earnings of more than fifteen years-amounting now to quite a respectable sum-he himself did not know; but having no wife nor child, nor any kindred whom he cared to honor with gifts, the greatest satisfaction he could find in his money was to count it over. This ocremony he performed by an ingenious process of his own invention, that did away with the necessity of abstracting the coin when once it was deposited; each deposit being made in sums of $5 securely tied in a bit of asnahurg, the whole amount could be pretty accurately reckoned by touch, the account being kept upon a tally stick, which old Gilbert always carried with him. When he had fingered his wealth to his satisfaction, Gilbert carefully read-For answer. Missy sat down on the justed the platter over the tin broken pot lid, raked the leaves over the spot, and skillfully heaped up the brush.

"Ole nigger gittin' stiff, tubbe sho'!" he said, rising with a grunt. "Time I in de brilin' sun, one o' dese days," Glorywuz fixin' up 'nother bottle o' white ash bok en' whisky. I git de bok en' Misslevirey gimme de whisky. Hit ain' too late for sassyfac, nuther. Little Missy allers honin' after sassyfac tea. I gwan tote her a bundle o' sassyfac ter de gret house dis night, seein' I wuz 'bleged ter spite her 'bout dem Furnivals,"

Old Gilbert took his way home by a roundabout route, through an old field known as the berry patch, where elderoushes and sassafras saplings grew rank in the fence corners, hedged round by little thickets of the odorous horse mint.

Here the old man set to work; down on his knees, by the aid of his ready jack knife, he was deftly extracting the roots whose rich aroma diffused itself around, when his trained ear caught the sound of steps approaching.

"Wha' dat?" he whispered to himself. with palpitating heart, lifting his head to listen. "Rabbit?"

A yellow cur, with cropped ears and barely three inches of tail, jumped upon a log on the other side of the fence, uttering a short, sharp bark.

Old Gilbert peered over the fence to right and left of him, along the bridle path that skirted the field.

"Whey you come fum, you ondemanded beas' critter?" he said, scornfully eying the cur, which he recognized as the property of "dem Furnivals,"

The dog answered with a yelp, jumped off the log and ran across the bridle path into the woods, but presently returned at the heels of a lank, sandy haired, sallow youth, clad in faded jeans.

Old Gilbert's heart knocked at his ribs voice and called sharply: "Amity! you as he thought of his treasure in the holtriffin' gal, come here stret, en' put on low of the wood; but "manners" degiven, and policy dictated a certain obequiousness of tone, but the old negro

The lad responded with sullen reluc-

"Whicherway is you comin' fum?" old Gilbert asked, insinuatingly,

"I dunno ez hit's any o' yo' business, from home then you, en'l sin't a nigger. I'm a-huntin' of a hawg, en' ef you ain't tolled hit ter yo' pen, you ole prowler, better'n two legs ter wait on Miss Winimaybe you're fur gittin' onter hits tracks.'

Old Gilbert's heart waxed hot. That he should be accused by this "po' white trash" of tolling away a lean and scrubby old hog!

"De Lor'-a-mighty!" he exclaimed, with a sort of persuasive indignation. 'Doan' you en' yo' folks know what I have got hawgs ev'y blessed year fattenin' cawntinual? I cuores my own Elvira stammered, not knowing what to bacon, en' is been doin' dat same, year in, year out, gwan on fo' you wuz bawn. I's a prised at ye!"

"Wall," drawled the boy, measurably subdued by this reminder of a fact with ain't just as good as can be." which he was well acquainted, "I s'picioned as ye're allers roun' these

"Mer" interrupted old Gilbert, with an uneasy thought of his buried treasure; cious shrewdness. then, recovering himself, "I ain't offen ow lan'," he said, with significance, vancing menacingly, while the cur growl- this child. "I fear Nicholas is-wild."

ed and showed his teeth, Thorne," continued old Gilbert, with in- strongest condemnation. flated superiority. "Fse a gemman's ain't inquirin' what ye air up toe."

white sow ez I come along,"

"Whicherway?" cions. "Side of de bridle path, followin" de woods," he said, avoiding all referthe beaten path that led down to the ence to the route by which he had come. Dunno'm what he want. He mek gret "'Spect she was gwan ter de branch, parade o' secrecy bout what he got Whyn't you keep her penned? Do ain'

"You 'ten' ter yo' business en' I'll 'ten' from the room. stacles he was accustomed to deal, and ter mine," retorted Jesse Furnival. they did not deter him. He had a secret "Prowlin' roun' these woods lak a free in jealcan resentment, as she followed errand in this wood through which he nigger. Ef the kernel sin't got nothin' her to the plazes. "Hukkom she theumate grunts, to come this gate. A away and walked up and down the plazes. made his way as if by instinct, for path better'n root diggin' fur you ter do, there was none; but this ancient child of whyn't be send you ter keep track o' that nature was at home in the wilderness; racketing son o' his'n? Nick Thorne have been in a fix, I kin tell you, over yander said old Gilbert, rising to bow and scrape,

"Wha' dat?" old Gilbert asked, in quick

"Ain't the kernel hearn how Nick Thorne wuz nigh en' about cut ter pieces Here, when he had rested awhile upon a in a row with Marcus White? Over a This was about all that Jesse Furnival > knew of the affair, but he hoped to learn "De gret mawster!" excluimed the old man, "When wuz dat?" "Oh, over en' above two months ago.

Ain't bearn nothin' bout hit?" "Look-a-here, boy," said old Gilbert, "dere ain' dat knife made what kin out Mawse Nicholas for pieces. Doan you go tole no sech lie aroun'. Who done hit anyhow?" "Much you know!" sneered Jesse Furnival. "I done tol' you hit wuz Marcus White done hit, what is sorter kin ter us all, bein' he is second cousin tor Upcla tar Thorne Hill, Missle-virey. Job's wife." And swelling with price in the prowess of this family connection, the youth spread his feet wide apart, and eved old Gilbert defiantly. "De law gwan hel' him 'countable, said old Gilbert.

"Ef the law kin git him?" retorted the boy, with exasperating laughter. "Marcus White is done put all Texis 'twixt him en the law." Then reverting suddenly to the object of his search, "I doan see no tracks," he said, inspecting the ground.

"No; she waz travelin' the aidge of dewoods," said old Gilbert; "in amongst

The boy glanced towards the woods, called to his dog, and walked on, "Po' white trash ain' got no manners nohow; sassyin' of a gemman's nigger, muttered old Gilbert glowering after him. ""Quality doan nuver talk to niggers dat-a-way. S'pose I is prowlin' bout dese woods? Hit's ow woods! Lawd! Lawd! I won'er is ever be seed me down in de heller? I'se tol' a monst'ous lie: I ain't seed naire old sow. But I wur jes en look atter Mawse Nick a little?" bleedred ter seers. Dret ber! I pintir doan bullieve she's got meat "nuil onter her bones ter feed de buzzards, dat ele-Furnival sow, but I'm mightly skeered she'll have the stren'th ter go nosin' roun' dat speshul bresh heap. En' I'm 'sturbed in my min' bout Mawse Nick. Dat boy ain't stiddy ez he mought be bless Gawd!

The thoughts of all hearts at Thorne Hill were revolving around Nicholas Thorne at this time. On account of some irregularities at college he had been banished to "Sunrise," his father's most distant plantation, partly by way of pun ishment, partly by way of keeping him out of temptation. The friends of the family did not think this the wises course to pursue with a young man of Nicholas Thorne's temperament, but the colonel was not a man to be advised, and Nicholas had been at Sunrise plantstion since early in January. No hint of the quarrel with Marcus White had reached Thorne Hill as yet, but the colonel was secretly fretted that his son, in all this time, had never once sued to be recalled, and Miss Elvira's deepest anxiety had been aroused by a note received a few days before, which had been mailed at Eden, the nearest postoffice to Sunrise, and was worded as follows:

Miss Thorne. "RESPECTED MADAM: I am a God fearin woman, and I feel it on my konscunce to warn the famly of Mr. Nick Thorne that Sunrise Plantation is a lonesome place for a young man of sperrits and ift he are not speedily removed out of harms way great trouble is in waitin and so no more from yours respectful,

"ROXANNA WHITE."

Miss Elvira, not daring to show this note to her brother, lest it might widen the breach between him and his son, had gone up to town to consult her cousin, Mrs. Herry, in whose judgment she manded that some greeting should be placed unbounded faith, though she bad not always the courage to follow her advice. But Mrs. Herry was on a visit t bade the youth "Good morning" with a her plantation in Jefferson, and Miss Elbow very many degrees removed from vira had returned still bordened with the the respect he would have accorded to afflicting note, which she was always poring over whene her brother was out of the way. began reading it furtively at the tea tacle as soon as the colonel retired to his musings on the front piazza. Missy, why had come in late to her supper, was eating waffles was the surly answer. "I ain't no furer and honey with a leisurely gusto that had driven Griffin Jim to a stool in the kitchen, with the remark, "Fo' legs is fred's delays," and thus Miss Elvira and > Winifred improved the occasion, "Aunt Elvira," said she, "don't vou think it's time Brer Nicholas was let to come home? He's been gone ever since befo' corn droppin'." Missy's calendar was of the plantation.

her little niece were alone together.

"Oh, Winifred, I'm afraid Nicholas isn't - always - well conducted." Miss "It ain't no difference to me if he is bad or good," said Missy sturdily; "he is Brer Nicholas. Only I don't believe he

"But he ought not to disappoint his father as he does," sighed Miss Elvira. "Well, I reckon father disappoints him some," Missy replied, with preco-"You don't understand, dear," said Miss Elvira, wondering a little at her-"Look a-here!" shouted the boy, ad- self that she should speak so freely to And Miss Elvira sighed deeply. In her "En' I b'longs ter Kernel Jasper vocabulary "wild" was a word of the

"Let him come home, then, and get tamed," said Missy, promp "I doan know ex that's anythin' to This was Mrs. Herry's advice alsome," said Jesse Furnival, with sullen Mrs. Herry, who reasoned from a sound abatement of his wrath. "But, come, judgment, and her own deep experience now ain't you seen nothin' of ow ole in a like case. But to advocate Cousin white sow in yo' comin's en' goin's? I Myrtilla's opinion openly was more than this student of Bishop Ken could venture Old Gilbert had dropped on his knees upon. Her strongest hope was that Nichoagain and was tugging at the sassafras las might be tained by a marriage with roots. "The comin' en' going on my own his pretty cousin Flora Thorne, who had proper arrants," he grumbled. "My own- the merit of pleasing the colonel. That the ers deselves doan hol' me ter 'count 'bout | colonel should be pleased was the all imdat. Howsomedever, I did see a lean ole portant point, in view of which Miss Elvira ignored the fact that she berself had not found Flora flawless. But this The eagerness of the inquiry was as was not a subject to be discussed with fuel to the flame of old Gilbert's suspi- Missy, and she felt relieved when Glory-

Ann interrupted with the announcement: "Missle-virey, here's ole man Gilbert, 'Funme!" shouted Missy, and darted "Jes' hear dat!" grumbled Glory-Ann, min'in' me 'bout sassy fac."

goes after ole man Gubert, stidger re-"Howd'ye, Missel-vicey; hun you do?"

as she came out on the plants. "Thank you; pretty well, Gilbert. How do you do?" "I'm ter say tollable, bless Gawd; Missle-virey, I lowed ter bring a dozen siova for a 'membrance, but de ain't all laid vit; an I knowed Missy was gwan be glad o' some sassylac, so I jes come long so.

much obliged, Gilbert. "Tubbe sho!" said the old man, and paused and scratched his head. Then, pade of the screech owl yet some minutes with a desperate abruptness, "Misselvirey," said he, "when you hear fum

Mawre Nicholas?" "About—a week ago," said Miss Elvira, "She ain't beerd 'bout dat cuttin' scrape bleedged ter let on ef she had," old Gilbert argued to himself; then aloud, "Hit do 'pear lak Mawse Nicholas orter b'long

"Yes, he orter!" Missy declared, "He's gwas on 21, Mawse Nick is, come some day de las' o' dis month. He orter be gitten' married."

"No, he orsen't?" Missy objected with Old Gilbert was doubled up with silent laughter when the colonel came out on silencing the dogs.

the piazza. The colonel was a handsome man, though past fifty, tall, erect, with clear out features of a somewhat stern the new risen moon; a goodly young feland melancholy cast. He was formal and precise in bearing, perhaps even a triffe pompous, but he could unbend occasionally, and with this favorite old slave he was always disposed to be jocubrown beard of early manbood, old Gil-"Hello, Gilbert!" he said. "Any baskets to sell? You must be getting rich?" "Dullaw, mawster! Dis po' ole no 'count nigger gittin' rich? I nin't sellin' naire baskit ter-night, sub; I come ter 'quire 'bout Mawse Nick. En' I beco a-studyin', mawater, det bein's how dere ain't no odd jobs in 'tickler jes' nows'posin' I wuz ter go down ter Sunrise,

"You call him an odd job, do you?"

said the colonel, not without bitterness. "Now, mawster, you is comical, tubbe sho! Hit's gwan on nigh two years sence you're gotten up to bill." Mawse Nick been home ter stay, en' I'm gittin ole. I hankers ter see dat boy dis ole nigger! I come a puppose to see what I mos'ly raised." von. 'Pears lak hit's so lonesome ter de "Laws-massy! Hear dat, now!" ejac-Hill, douten you; en' Missle-virey, she ulated Glery-Aun in the background. sont you a hox o' goodles. I'll jes' step "How long do you mean to stay?" tha back en' fetch em outen de cyart." But Nicholas fortaile. "Here, Virgil, go bring in those things," be commanded olonel asked, not unwilling to make indirect overtures to his son. "Hit's a matter of thutty mile en' bet- a negro boy who was hanging about the ter," said old Gilbert, meditatively rub- pinzza, "Hungry and tized, I rocken bing his forehead with his horny fore- you are, old man? finger. "A day ter go and a day to

"Suppose you go to-morrow?" the colonei suggested, with secret strong approval. "You can take the ox cart." jes' ter look at ye, Massae Nick." "Yes, suh," replied old Gilbert, with wood where his treasure was buried. "I Nicholas responded sonorously, ha' ter start 'fo' sun-up." "Very well. I'll write you a pass.

Nicholas can write you another to return This meant unlimited leave of absence.

lowest bow. Glory-Anu immediately sought Daphne, Miss Elvira's maid, for the satisfaction of expressing her mind. "Jes' you orter hear dat succumstantial ole nigger claimin' dat he raised Mawse Nicholas!" said she, in high dudgeon. "Whey wur me, I'd lak ter know? En' whiles I'm a-raisin' en' a-mindin' of Missy, here he is cavortin' of hissef bout de kentry in de you evart. When she gits growed sposs he'il be layle claim for her raisin' en exactin'

CHAPTER III.

privuiliges cordin.

"How dive, Masors Nicholas! huh you do?" pink. At break of day old Gilbert set forth on his journey in the jolting little cart, drawn by a small black ox that went a plodding gait.

Sunday best-a blue broadcloth coat with de is stars." brass buttons, and a black satin vest, once the property of Col. Thorne's father, a pair | gayly of nankeen pantaloons, and a white hat, stiff and tall, discarded by the colonel. He sat upon a plank across the front of now. the cart, with his feet dangling outside, The plank was cushioned by a blanket in times a week do you think I could ride which was folded his every day suit of homespun. A box that held a contribution to Nicholas' larder, from Miss Elvira. was safely bestowed in one corner, at the bottom of the cart, where a wallet containing his noon refreshment lay beside a dingy umbrella, the cherished possession of twenty years. expanse of pine barren; vast, solemn, with fierceness, sombre, it stretched in every direction, the rays of the sinking sun shining faintly athwart the multitudinous, tall dark trees, whose boughs, swaying in the upper air, maintained a continuous susurrus that emphasized the silence. Himself and his ox were the only living creatures visible to this solitude, save an occasional bird that darted above his head, as if in haste to escape to a more gental wood; and old Gilbert, to keep himself in heart, began to sing his hynns. Lifting up his voice, he made the solitude resound to a weird strain, in harmony with the sighing of the pines:

Oh, ilvin' humble, mankle, humble,

Oh, itvin humble, do tell done mill Oh, livin' humble, humble, humble,

On livin' humble, yo' this gwas come! and sun was down, and the moon vet risen, when he came out on the other gret house. wrapped in a piece o' cloth; but nose kin side of the larren, where he ceased his singing, being now near his journey's end; for as the foot of the slope was the arge rod gate that gave entrance to Sunrise plantation.

Gld Gilbert dismounted, with some whippoorwill was calling in the grove house; and as he climbed back upon the turt, a screech owl attered its uncanny man

"Drat dat critturf" the old negro muttered, in fear and anger, as he stooped with haste to pull off his left shoe, "Hit's sich a bad sign ter hear a screech owl; but de do say, ef you pet off yo left show. yo' pet off de bad luca. Lawd, sen' no bad luck ain' gwan fall ter Mawse Nick, long o dat sturbance what dat Jesse Furnival named ter me. Lemme git outen "I've plenty of eggs just now, I'm dishyer grove quick ez ele Brandy kin

But old Gilbert had to endure the serelonger, before he came to the second gate in front of the house of hewed logs, which was neither a cramped nor a comfortless dwelling, though it moved the soors of the old negro fresh from the grandeur of Thorne Hill. "Bich a place fur Mawne Nick?" he ejaculated con-temptuously, as he holted his or. A vociferous chorus from the dogs greeted his arrival, and Gilbert productly kept his perch on the cart, shouting

"Hello, yourself!" answered a voice through the dusk. "Dat's him, bless Glore!" the old man the cart, while the same voice was heard

Nicholas was standing on the plazza dimly outlined in the uncertain light of always late before he returned. low, tall, twood shouldered and straight rounded cheeks, his bread forehead, and his mouth and chin with the silky, red bert know by heart. "How d'ye, Mawas Nicholast hall you do" he shouted, with a choshle of ex-steps of sawn'blocks. "Why, where in thunder did you or from?" oried Nicholas. "Anything the matter at home?"

"Wall, I'm not sure but the sentiment a hesitating thought of the hollow in the is reciprocated in my own personality." "Wha' dat, Mawse Nicholast"

"No, Mawso Nick, I ain' so hongry; but ridin' is pow'ful stiffenin', en' ef you please, suh, I'll jes' drap down here on

"Aha! come a courtin'!" Nicholas returned with a laugh. " Can't fool me;

"Now, Mawse Nick! Pokin' fun at

"What I mean to say," replied Nicholas, with due gravity, "is, that the visual perception of your material essence awakens a sensation in the cardiac region that "Thankee, suh," said Gilbert, with his | completely eliminates any inclination to despondency

"Mawse Nicholas," said old Gilbert, in soletan admiration, "you ofter go bout de kentry talkin' politics, you ort! You'd git 'lected ter somethin', sho' ez shoetin', But min' now, Masse Nick," he suddenly interzupted himself, scarting up, "dat boy orier be mighty kerful how he han'les dem tings, he mout bus' de battam outen dat box what Misale-virey put de goodles in. En dere's my rumberilla?" he exclaimed, excitedly, as Virgil staggered through the gate. "Min' how you toto dat rumberilla, you plantatica nigger! Han'tcher! You great brok dem ribs, en' den what? Dishyer rumberilla is older den you is, blawse Nick," he explained with pride, as he spread it open to satisfy himself that it was ambroken, Hit was yo' gran'paw gin' him ter me, en' l'ee toted hit over you many's de time, when you wunn baby. We donn see no sich ev'ry day," he declared, shutting the umbrella with a snap, and turning to caution Virgil about the box. a sugar heart in dat same box she sont you, Mawie Nick, det alse kissed it when she wropped hit up."

"Dear little sister!" Nicholas sighed, half to himself. "How I wish she were peacer my own ago."

"Dere's Miss Flora, you know," said Gilbert, insignatingly. "She's gwan on 19. Glory! Mawse Nick, you joe orter see Miss Fiora scripe she come home onten school. De way the can clatter de pianner, tubbe sho! En' she's ez pretty ez "Red head and freehled face?" said

"Now, Marwo Nick! You ter be jokin! dat way, when you know Man Plora is The old man, with a view to doing got hair his de inside o' a chincapin burr, Mawse Nicholas honor, was attired in his en' her face is illies on' roses, en' lier eyes

Nicholan

"Go on, poets maxitur!" Nicholas cried "Tell you what's a fac', Mawse Nick, you orter be settle' up ter Miss Flora yat "Hum!" said Nicholas, "How many back and forth, these thirty miles, for her aweet sake?" Old Gilbert rubbed his forehead in deep thought before he said: "You mought-straighten hit wid mawster, en' git ter be at home." "No, I'll be hanged! Here was I sent, and here I mean to stay until I'm invited Late in the afternoon, he came to an home again?" Nicholas declared, almost "But you see, Mawse Nick," old Gilbert remonstrated, "fotks ain' blin', on' dem what looks at Miss Flora onet is enfective and for look agin. Deve's a lot of young Juny bus after a fle bosis." "Did my father send you down here to preach my consin Wiera to me?" Nicholas "No. Mawse Nick. I'm gwatt to tell de bottom fac', Jes' yestiddy down by de berry puich me 'n' dut Jesse Fornival awapped some words; en' he let me know how you had some 'sturbance down here lowed hit was all a lie. Marcus White is hin ter de l'arnivals, ea' what is de ter min long of your Hat I was dat measur in my min', come dark, I went up tur de 'And told my father?' juterrupted Nicholan, nagrify, starting up. "No, Marce Nich, I ain't let en termobody: I je come now tor see far myse'f, dat you is safe on' seon'." Nicholas was much moved; he terned feveral times. When at last he sat down, "Gilbert," he mid, with an effort to speak lightly, "you have the soul of a gentle-

"I'm bloodged ter ye, Mawae Nick," said the old man, getting on his feet to bow his acknowledgments. "To grantpaw en' you paw wux gemmen, en' I'se b'longed to 'em but. I ain' naver 'socia ated myse'l wid no white trush." Nicholas looked at him with an edil smile, saying slowly, "I've turned over a new lenf. I'm net going to be a had buy any more. You can carry that news home, if you like." "Hew Gawd!" ejeculated old Gilbert. "That affair between me and Marcus White happened some time ago: R's all over now, and my father heel know nothing about it. "The Lor's mighty, Mowie Nickt His waz de treed, deal Way off here-en' nene but niggen en' de abemeer ter tek king on you?" "On, I was well attended to." Nicholas replied evanively. "Tru going to lead & stearly life in future; so this affair may as well be forgotten." "De Land be praised! Not but what I knowed you wan jer a-feelin' wid you chances for hare young folkess fun, Marrier Nick."

But old Gilbert had not been three chuckled, as he clambered down from days at Sonrice planation before he learned thus it was Kicneles' invariable

"Dat boy do too much provide" by night," the old man grandled. "Mawas as an arrow; his great brown eyes, his Notkorter behome flyin youn' Min Flora, curling dark hair, his straight nose and enter on order be bome middle my own consums. But I so showed do buy is mixed in wid a leaf errord I'm Riveged ter stay outed I kin bek my observations. And in order to "Labe his observations."

ald Gilbert had we contribe a plan. "I dorno whey Mawas Nick kin be uberunt delight, as he sturabled up the grains so mildy," he argued, "bedooden hit's det place de calls. Elen, what has tried thee some years for he a town. Jes' water en' a meeting hoose, en' a han'ful u' "No, Mawse Nick, down you be un-Nich gimens me a pass for Eden. Fours easy. De is all peart. Hit's joe' me, had I mought be acted Stringher, on I